present for this dramatic and historic event.

The Mackinac Bridge will keep in step with temperature changes because allowances for swing and sway were engineered into the span. Dr. David B. Steinman, designer of the bridge, engineered the span to carry normal loads at temperatures ranging from 115 degrees above zero to 35 degrees below, said John W. Kinney, Steinman's resident engineer here.

"You can call this the world's most corrected bridge," Kinney said. "Even tapes used in bridge than they really are. Overall, finding a sense of mission, or a passion for something that is personally enjoyed, makes it easier to deal with the setbacks posed by routine responsibilities. If this doesn't occur intrinsically with the job, it can be found in a hobby, volunteerism, or in community activities.

Stress can and will produce untoward physiological effects, and these can become chronic. It's important not to ignore the risks. It appears that there are opportunities to reverse the effects of chronic stress on the mind and body. Identify the causes and actively pursue methods to counteract stress.
